

The Betrayal

Brand guidelines: the name, the marks, the colours, the type and the voice of the party game of loyalty and lies.

Candlelit. Theatrical. Mischievous.

The Betrayal is a hosted party game for one room and one evening. Everyone plays on their own phone. It opens with the Oath: every guest swears loyalty to the table, and a few of them are lying. Its world is a long table, a candle burning for every guest, and a hood that hides whoever broke their word. Everything we make should feel like that room: warm, dim, a little dangerous, and very well dressed.

CANDLELIT

Dark grounds, warm light. We glow; we never glare. Rose-gold is the candle flame of the brand. The hood is the dark around it.

THEATRICAL

Every screen is a scene. Big type, slow reveals, a pause before the name. The narrator tells a story; it never runs a quiz show.

MISCHIEVOUS

We enjoy the lie. We wink at the Forsworn and tease the Loyal. Never mean, never crude.

PREMIUM

One idea per screen, generous space, careful words. It should feel like the good napkins came out.

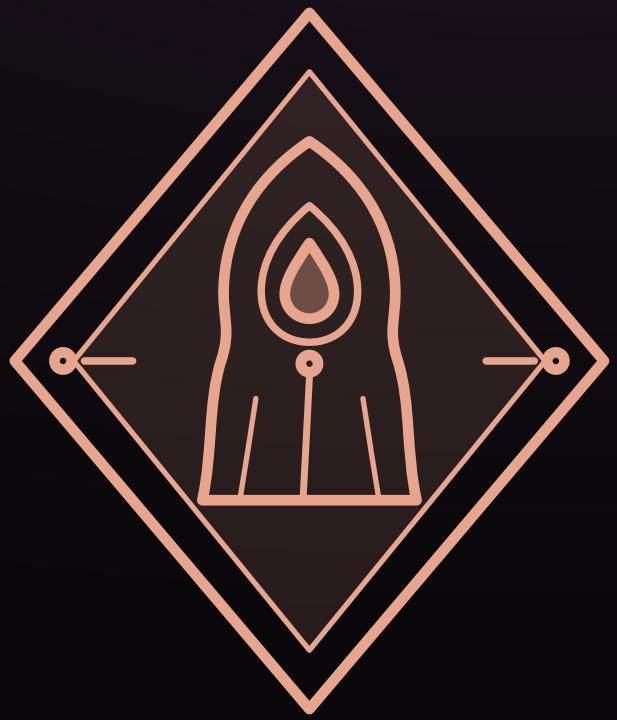

WHAT WE ARE

- Our own world. An original game with its own look, sound and words.
- For hosts. The evening runs itself, so whoever hosts gets to enjoy it.
- For one room. Faces across a table, a secret on every phone. The TV is the stage, not the game.

WHAT WE ARE NOT

- Not a TV tie-in. We never name, quote, imitate or allude to a television programme, its presenters, its castle, its music or its words.
- Not another company's Betrayal. We never borrow the vocabulary or look of other games that use the word.
- Not horror. No gore, no jump-scares. A drop of wine-red, not blood spatter.
- Not a gadget. No apps to install, no accounts: scan a code, type a name, play.

The one in the hood

A hooded figure stands inside a lozenge, and where its face should be there is only a candle flame. It is the whole game in one picture: someone at the table has broken their oath and hides under the hood, and the candle is what gives them away. With the wordmark, it is the primary signature, and it is unchanged.

ANATOMY

- The lozenge: a double diamond frame, the outer line at full weight and the inner at half. It sets the mark apart from crests and coats of arms.
- The hood: a pointed hood falling to a straight hem, with two folds and a clasp at the throat. Never add hands, feet or a face.
- The flame: a filled teardrop inside the hood's opening. It is the only solid shape in the mark.
- The pins: two short rails and studs at the side points, like a brooch or a seal.

THE WORDMARK

"The Betrayal" set in Grenze Gotisch SemiBold (600) and converted to outlines. "The" is part of the name. Always use the supplied artwork; never retype it.

Three ways to sign

Horizontal: the default. Web headers, the TV top bar, email, merchandise.

Stacked: covers, posters, packaging, social squares, the TV title card.

Mark alone: only inside a layout that already says the name, such as an ad or a card. Icons, avatars and stickers use the seal (page 5).

COLOURWAYS

Rose-gold on Ink or Plum. The hero.

Ivory on Velvet, photography or busy dark grounds.

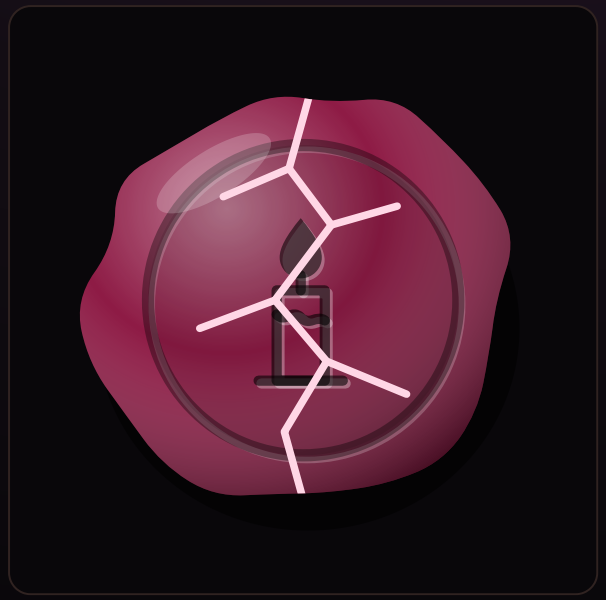

Ink on Parchment and any light ground.

Ink on Copper. Single-colour print uses Black or White.

The broken oath

Full colour: wine wax, a candle embossed, a rose crack. On Ink, Plum or Velvet.

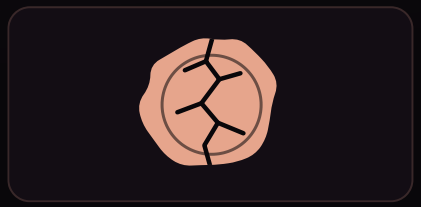

A wax seal with a candle pressed into it, cracked straight through: the oath someone broke. It is the seal the TV shows when a Forsworn is revealed, and the brand's second signature. The primary lockup is unchanged and still signs everything that needs the name.

WHERE IT GOES

- The favicon and app icon (already in use)
- Social avatars: the profile picture on every channel
- Stickers
- Packaging seals

RULES

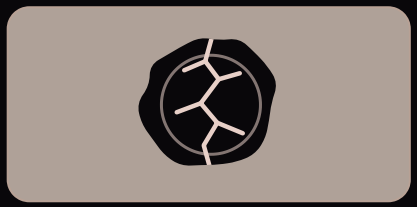

- It never replaces the primary lockup. Where the name needs saying, sign with the lockup.
- Use the supplied files. Never redraw the wax, the candle or the crack, and never add a letter or a word.
- For print, embossing and small sizes, use a one-colour version.

Rose on dark grounds.

Ivory on photography and busy dark grounds.

Ink on Parchment and any light ground.

Give it room to breathe

CLEAR SPACE

Keep a margin of at least X on every side, where X is the height of the flame (about one sixth of the mark's height). Nothing enters it: no type, no edges, no other logos.

MINIMUM SIZES

- Mark: 8 mm / 24 px tall. Any smaller and the fine inner line fills in.
- Horizontal lockup: 34 mm / 130 px wide.
- Stacked lockup: 24 mm / 95 px wide.

FILES

Every lockup and colourway is supplied as SVG (outlined, so no fonts are needed) and as transparent PNG at 2400 px, in 02-brand/logos. The seal is there too: SVG and a 1024 px PNG in full colour, and SVG in rose, ivory and ink.

NEVER

- Stretch or squash it.
- Turn it gold, or any colour outside the colourways.
- Add shadows, bevels or outlines.
- Set it on a clashing or busy ground.
- Rotate it.
- Retype it, drop "The", or write "Betrayal" alone.
- Use the seal in place of the lockup.
- Pair it with a TV programme's name or logo, or with another game's name.
- Put either mark near religious symbols (see the Oath, page 9).

Plum ink and rose-gold

Dark, warm plum grounds carry almost everything. Rose-gold is our light: titles, key lines, the one button that matters. Wine-red is kept for the moment someone dies or a Forsworn is revealed. Verdigris and Night steel are working colours for the Keeper's phone (safe, private) and never lead. Roughly: Ink and Plum 62%, Ivory 20%, Rose-gold 12%, everything else 6%.

Oaths, candles and seals

MOTIFS

- The Oath is where every night begins. Heads down, hands flat on the table, one promise to the room.
- Candles are the guests: one each, lit as they sit down. A snuffed candle is a death, and it's the only place we show one.
- Wax seals stand for people: one colour each, initial pressed in blackletter. A Forsworn's seal cracks at the Unmasking, and that cracked seal is the secondary mark: the broken oath.
- The hood belongs to the Forsworn. Never draw it as a person with a face: a hood, a fold, a shadow at the edge of the light.
- Lancet windows frame the TV; their glass changes with the hour (dawn rose, day amber, night steel).
- Mist and dust are slow and low. Nothing flashes except a reveal.

THE OATH

The Oath is the opening: every guest swears the oath of loyalty to the table, and a secret on their phone makes a few of them Forsworn (in Classic, blindfolded, it's the Keeper's tap on the shoulder). It's the brand's most theatrical moment. Treat it with care:

- Capital O for the scene ("the Oath"), lower case for the promise itself ("everyone swore an oath").
- Keep it theatrical, not religious: no crosses, altars, priests or holy books.
- Show it with hands on a table, phones face down and candlelight.

> "Lay your hands on the table. Swear to the people beside you that you will be loyal until the last candle goes out."

Plain words, lower case: exile, night, dawn, dinner, poison, murder, oath, seal, candle, blindfold, chalkboard; and the Interval. The full lists, awards included, are in 01-game/glossary-and-naming.md.

The voice at the head of the table

We speak like a host who has been waiting all evening to say this: second person, present tense, a little wicked, never wordy. Short sentences. A pause before the name.

SOUNDS LIKE US

> "Heads down. Hands flat on the table. If I hear a single word, you will answer for it at dawn."

> "Look at your phone. If it says Forsworn, don't let your face say it too."

> "Look at the screen: there is a candle burning for every one of you."

> "Every Forsworn has been unmasked. The Loyal have won."

DO

- Address the room directly: you, your table, tonight.
- Use British English and plain words: name who you exile, not submit a vote; the Interval, not a break-out.
- Ask for the sale plainly: Book a Table, or Become a Regular.
- Say the length honestly: best with 8 to 16. A big table or a long night is a fact, not a selling point.
- Keep secrets in the copy too. Never hint who holds a role.

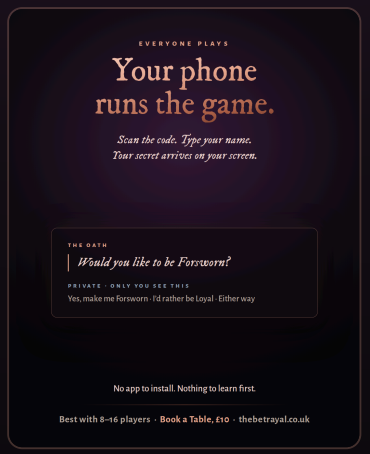

DON'T

- Name, quote or allude to any TV programme, presenter, catchphrase, castle or theme tune.
- Borrow another Betrayal game's words or look.
- Write gore or cruelty. Murder is a tap on the shoulder, not a crime scene.
- Use tech words in front of guests: app, sync, user, click.

Headlines are set in IM Fell DW Pica; the blackletter appears only in the wordmark. These are drawn from the brand, not from game screens: wherever the product itself is shown, add real TV and phone screenshots, because real screens beat mock-ups.
